Georgia governor signs heartbeat abortion ban, joining US movement

REUTERS

Abortion-rights groups vowed to challenge the ban immediately.

Georgia became the fourth U.S. state this year to outlaw abortion after a doctor can detect a fetal heartbeat, when its Republican governor on Tuesday signed a bill that an abortion-rights group vowed to challenge immediately.

Opponents called the legislation a virtual ban because fetal heartbeats can be detected as early as six weeks, before a woman may be aware she is pregnant.

Abortion foes say the bills are intended to draw legal challenges, in hopes that a case will land before the U.S. Supreme Court, where a majority of conservative judges including two appointed by Republican President Donald Trump could overturn Roe v. Wade, the 1973 landmark decision that established a woman's right to an abortion.

"Our job is to do what is right, not what is easy," Georgia Gov. Brian Kemp said as he signed the bill, surrounded by applauding supporters.

Kentucky, Mississippi and Ohio have enacted heartbeat laws since mid-March, and Iowa passed one last year. Courts have blocked the Iowa and Kentucky laws, and the others face legal challenges. The American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia and the Center for Reproductive Rights have vowed to sue to stop this law.

"This law is bafflingly unconstitutional," Elisabeth Smith, chief counsel for the center, said in a statement. "Bans like this have always been blocked by courts. We will be suing Georgia to make sure this law has the same fate."

> "Our job is to do what is right, not what is easy."
> Georgia Gov. Brian Kemp

Anti-abortion advocates have introduced measures in 15 states to ban the procedure as early as six weeks into a pregnancy, according to Rewire.News, a site specializing in the issue.

Georgia's Living Infants Fairness and Equality Act permits later abortions in medical emergencies. In cases of rape or incest, it requires the woman to file an official police report.

The Georgia law has also raised concerns among abortion-rights advocates about expanding "abortion deserts," described as major cities that are at least 100 miles (160 km) from an abortion provider, adding a particular hardship for poorer women.

Between Georgia and Mississippi is Alabama, where the state's House has passed a bill that would ban all abortions unless the mother's life is threatened. The state's Senate is likely to vote on it this week, raising the prospect of an extensive abortion desert in the Southeast.

"Women will have to cross state lines and likely multiple state lines in order to get the care that they need," Angeline Ti, a family medicine physician in Georgia and fellow with Physicians for Reproductive Health, said in a telephone interview. "We know that when abortion is illegal that doesn't mean it goes away. And so what this means is that the women are going to have to do more extreme things." REUTERS

Derby winner Country House out of Preakness

2 Kentucky Derby winner Country House will not run in this month's Preakness Stakes in Baltimore, Pimlico Race Course said on Tuesday, ruling out the prospect of a Triple Crown this year. Country House won the Kentucky Derby on Saturday after on-track winner Maximum Security was disqualified for interference and was expected to be in the Preakness Stakes field on May 18. The chestnut son of 2010 Preakness Stakes winner Lookin At Lucky is the first Kentucky Derby winner to miss the second leg of U.S. thoroughbred horse racing's Triple Crown since 1996, when Grindstone was found to have a knee injury and was retired. Country House was a 65-1 long- hot at the 1 1/4-mile Kentucky Derby, where he finished second on a muddy track before objections were raised, causing a delay that ultimately led to a stunning reversal. Schumer wants hearings before impeachment effort

3 The top Democrat in the U.S. Senate said on Tuesday that Congress should thoroughly investigate the findings of Special Counsel Robert Mueller before deciding whether to move forward with impeachment proceedings against President Donald Trump. "I believe that we should have hearings. We should thoroughly investigate the Mueller report. We ought to see every aspect of the Mueller report and then we can make a decision," Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer told reporters. U.S. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell on Tuesday sought to slam the door on further investigations of Trump by declaring "case closed" after a two-year probe of Russia's meddling in the 2016 elections. However, battles between the White House and congressional Democrats over documents and testimony related to the Mueller investigation showed no signs of abating. REUTERS

Multiple students hurt in Colorado school shooting

4 Multiple students were hurt on Tuesday in a shooting at a Denver-area school, the local sheriff said, and two people were taken into custody as authorities searched for a possible third suspect. Deputies from the Douglas County Sheriff's office responded to reports of a shooting at a science and technology school in the community of Highlands Ranch, 25 miles south of Denver, shortly before 2 p.m. Mountain Time, the sheriff's office said on Twitter. A sheriff's office spokeswoman said in a brief news conference that "multiple students" had been hurt and that two suspects had been arrested. She said law enforcement officers were searching for a possible third suspect. A man who called in to local KOA radio told the station that his son was in a classroom when two people armed with guns burst in and opened fire, wounding two students. REUTERS

Boston Uber drivers to strike on Wednesday

Beantown drivers will join workers across the U.S. in walking out.

MORGAN ROUSSEAU
morgan@metro.us

Uber and Lyft drivers in Boston are expected to stage a 24-hour strike on Wednesday to protest what they say are unfair employment conditions.

The strike comes just before the ride-hailing company Uber goes public, and underscores the challenge for Uber of finding a way to lower driver costs in order to become profitable and paying drivers enough to retain their services. Uber expects to price its IPO on Thursday and begin trading on the New York Stock Exchange on Friday.

Boston Uber and Lyft drivers join fellow ride-sharing drivers in New York City, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Diego and Washington, D.C., who were also planning to strike on Wednesday. Boston Independent Drivers Guild board member Felipe Martinez told WBUR he was asking passengers who would otherwise use the ride-sharing apps to take public transportation during the strike.

"The sweat of the drivers has built these companies, and built the profits, and there is no trickle-down effect," said Martinez. "It's going to the top owners of the corporation."

The drivers guild plans to stage a protest outside an Uber office in Saugus from noon to 3 p.m. on Wednesday, Boston Magazine reported.

Uber hopes to be valued at between $80.5 billion and $91.5 billion. Uber has yet to turn a profit. It reported a net loss for the first quarter of 2019.

New York prosecutors allege sex cult leader was 'predator'

Former self-help guru Keith Raniere was a "predator" who preyed on young women, including a 15-year-old girl, and turned them into sex slaves as part of a cultlike organization, a federal prosecutor told a jury at the start of his trial on Tuesday.

"The defendant took advantage of them emotionally and sexually," Assistant U.S. Attorney Tanya Hajjar said in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn. "He sold himself as the smartest, most ethical person in the world. ... He compared himself to Einstein and to Gandhi."

But defense lawyer Marc Agnifilo told jurors that all the women joined Nxivm voluntarily and that Raniere was merely a tough taskmaster, not an abusive criminal mastermind.

"This is something these people signed up for," Agnifilo said. "Control can be very bad. Control can also make Marines. Control can make gold medal winners."

Raniere, 58, is accused of recruiting women to join his group, Nxivm, and then exercising total dominion over them — forcing them to have sex with him, restricting their diets and branding them with his initials.

"No one could challenge his authority," Hajjar told jurors as Raniere listened from the defense table, wearing a blue shirt and gray sweater with his formerly shoulder-length hair cut short.

Raniere has pleaded not guilty to charges of sex trafficking, child pornography and other crimes and faces life in prison if convicted.

Some of his alleged "slaves," as well as members of his inner circle, are expected to testify at the trial, which could last up to six weeks. REUTERS

Boston cop canned after RI strippers allegedly stole his gun

The women who are charged with stealing the cop's gun say he paid them $2,500 for sex.

NATE HOMAN

Strippers allegedly stole Boston cop's gun from his car in February. GETTY MAGES

A Boston cop has been sacked after two strippers stole his service weapon last winter.

Emanuel Brandao, 37, was officially fired on March 28 for conduct unfit for a police officer after two Rhode Island strippers allegedly stole his gun from the glove box of his BMW in February, according to the Boston Globe.

Brandao was already on probation because he was a recent addition to the police force.

The BPD placed Brandao on leave and opened an internal investigation, according to the AP.

Brandao reportedly called Pawtucket Police at about 2:30 a.m. on Feb. 2 to report that his weapon had been taken from his vehicle in the Hampton Inn parking lot in Pawtucket. The off-duty officer reportedly went to the hotel bar to meet a woman, later identified as Neish Rivera, he'd been exchanging messages through Instagram, before going to the Nara Lounge in Providence where they met up with Rivera's friend, Melissa Dacier.

Brandao told investigators had his gun on him at that time, but reportedly locked it in his car before trio "spent some time" at Cadillac Lounge. They were soon kicked out of the club after security said they considered a man they were with to be "undesirable." Security also knew Rivera, a former stripper who danced there, had been charged with prostitution at the Foxy Lady a month prior, according to the Globe.

Brandao told police the trio returned to the Hampton Inn, where the women reportedly got into an argument with a man, later identified as Kyle Benford, and his girlfriend in the hotel hallway. Benford had accused Dacier and Rivera of stealing something from the couple. Following the confrontation, the trio went to Brandao hotel room and "hung out."

However, the women later told police that Brandao agreed to pay them $2,500 for sex, according to the Providence Journal.

Brandao told investigators that he had given Dacier his keys while they were at the hotel to retrieve his phone charger from his car. At this point, he told officials that his gun went missing.

Pawtucket police arrested Neish Rivera, 25, of Pawtucket and Dacier, 22, of Providence and were charged with conspiracy and the larceny of a firearm. Benford, 24, was also arrested in February in connection with the theft of the gun.

"Specifically, on or about Feb. 2 while off-duty in Rhode Island he failed to properly secure his department-issued firearm when he gave his vehicle keys to a civilian and the civilian used those keys to take his firearm," department spokesman Detective Sgt. John Boyle told the Boston Herald.

'The Biggest Little Farm' reminds us of what we can give back to the world

We spoke with the film's director and subject, John Chester.

PAT KING

PROVIDED

John Chester was tired of the big city life. After years of grinding it out as a documentary filmmaker, Chester, along with his wife Molly and their dog Todd, had decided to trade it all in for a fresh start as farmers by purchasing their own farm, Apricot Lane Farms, just outside of Ventura, California. While they were learning the ropes, Chester couldn't resist the urge to document their story, and that is exactly what he did with his new film, "The Biggest Little Farm."

Over the course of eight years, Chester captures the ups and downs that he and Molly had encountered along the way. From pests, diseases and pesky coyotes, the Chester family had to learn on their feet in order to make sure their regenerative farm could thrive and operate to its full capabilities. Just as soon as things started to look their most bleak, John and Molly began to really understand that by being totally in tune with the purpose of each form of life on their farm, you can understand the functionality and positive reaction needed to create life. Or as John puts it in the film, "observation followed by creativity is becoming our greatest ally."

The film is a refreshingly positive meditation on teamwork and perseverance as well as a reminder that sometimes the most beneficial ingredient toward growth is to be humbled by something bigger than yourself.

While neither John or Molly had any experience in the field, taking the leap toward growing crops and tending to animals such as sheep, pigs, chickens and cattle was a big undertaking, to say the least. But in Chester's mind, if anyone was going to tell this story right, it would be him.

"There wasn't really a conversation or a consideration to make a documentary at all. I had actually legitimately given up the business," says Chester. "It was scary, but I was happy to move on from it. I had been doing it for 25 years and I felt like a lot of it had lost its meaning. But the thing is, I'm a documentary filmmaker. So I knew that if I ever did tell a story about this, I would regret not having some of these moments captured. So I started amassing this stuff, begrudgingly. Until Year Five, when I saw the methods were returning biodiversity to the farm in a way that was starting to solve problems. Then I realized that I would probably be the only person to spend five years, which turned into eight years, inside the engine of a story and an ecosystem like this and capturing it in such a detailed and nuanced way. It was an opportunity that I felt obligated to do."

The film perfectly captures the notion that all forms of life on this planet do their part in regenerating it and that it is our duty as humans to either stay out of the way or assist when needed. In another touching moment, John surmises this thesis perfectly when contemplating how animals decay into nutrients after they are deceased, "alchemizing death to life in one healthy clump of soil."

So what was the biggest lesson that John and Molly Chester learned from their first decade of farming? For John, it was that patience can go a long way.

"The solution that we had that was replicable time after time was not a physical thing, nor a specific thing, but it was a way of viewing the problem," explains Chester. "We had to recognize that when there was failure, there was great embarrassment. That great embarrassment often fueled this response, which was like a knee-jerk reaction to fix it, to cover it, to hide from that fear of embarrassment. We realized that actually what that was was the opportunity that signaled to us that we needed to slow down, not fix it too quickly, and take the problem apart. Try to clear your mind of the impending doom that it often felt like it was and look deeply at what fueled it and what were the biological regulators of that issue. Then, begin to, in small part, infuse tiny doses of those things toward that solution. Oftentimes that became a longstanding, more permanent solution to the problem."

"The Biggest Little Farm" opens in select cities this Friday.

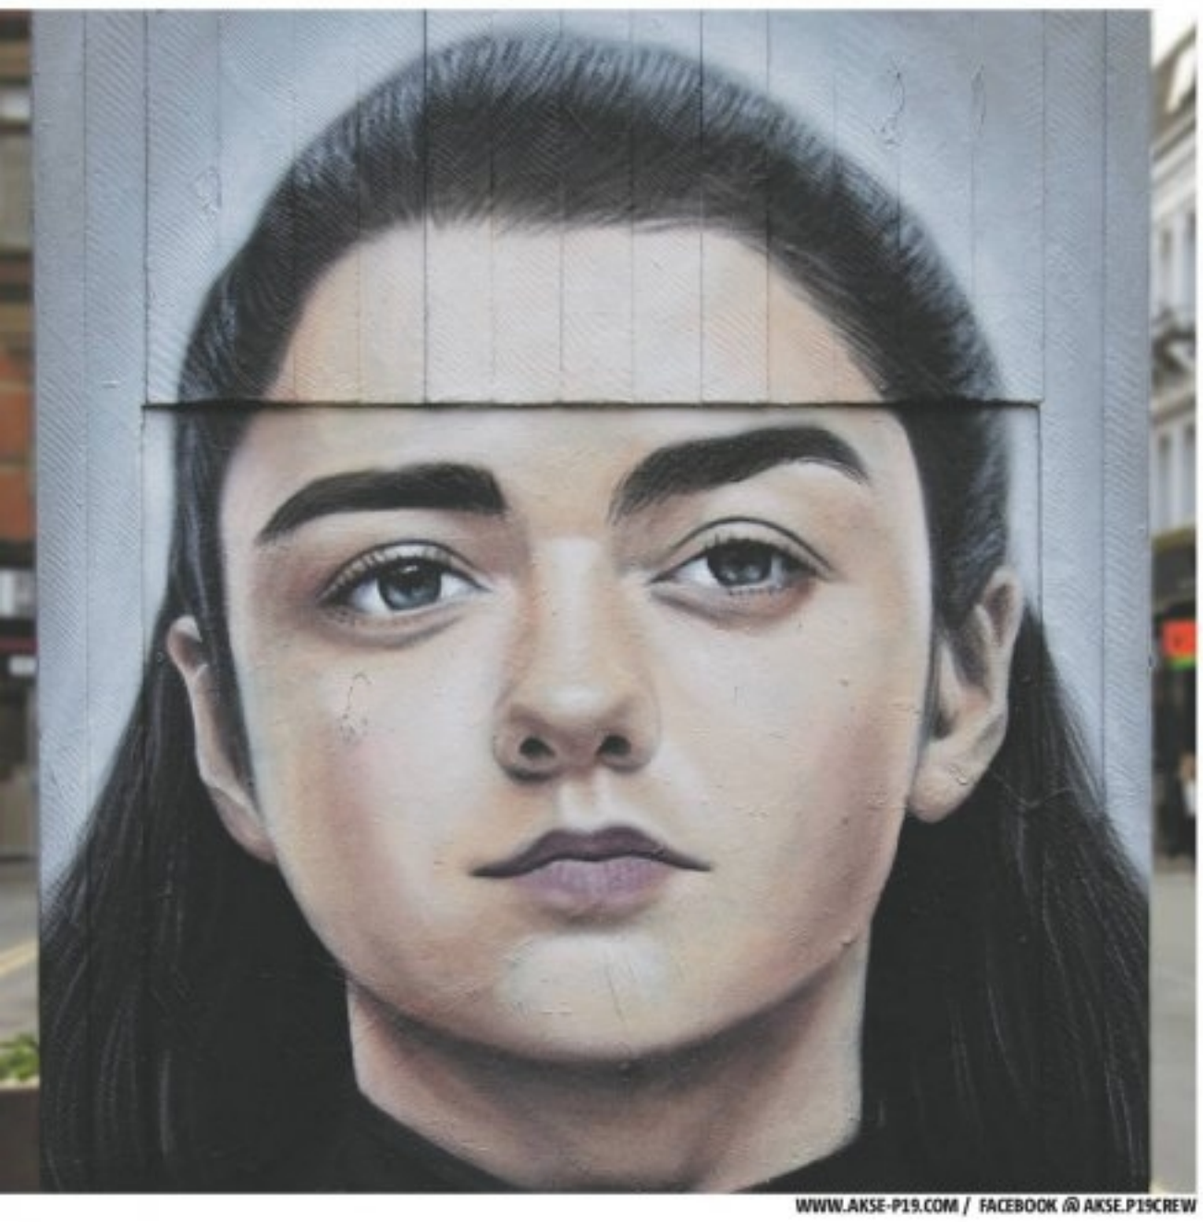
A street tribute to Arya Stark



WWW.AKSE-P19.COM / FACEBOOK @ AKSE.P19CREW

AKSE P19
French street artist based in the UK, @akse_p19 (Instagram)

Why did you decide to feature Arya in your artwork?
I'm a big fan of the show and have painted Tyrion Lannister twice: in Manchester in 2014 and in London in 2017. I had this spot to paint as part of the Outhouse project, which gives the opportunity to artists to work on some walls on Stevenson Square in the Northern Quarter. And after third episode of the last season I just felt the need to paint Arya Stark.

You enjoyed her killing of the King of the Night scene?
I had no idea how the battle was going to end up but was glad Arya was the one who killed the Night King.

Tell more about the creation process.
I started sketching the outlines, then added all the main tones, finally blend the colours and work on fine details. The critical and most difficult part was to get the like ness right.

Are you planning to make murals of more GoT characters?
A week before painting this piece I was asked by a follower if I would paint another GoT character. I had no idea at the time that I would paint Arya, but replied that I had considered it but had no immediate plan. So even though I still have no plans to do so, you never know....

STEVENS DESERVES BRUNT OF BLAME FOR C'S' FAILURES

Brad Stevens and Kyrie Irving were never able to get on the same page this season. GETTY IMAGES

The good money says that the Celtics will go out with a whimper in Milwaukee tonight (8 p.m., TNT).

Playing a soulless brand of basketball, the Celtics have gotten Boston fans to the point where they would almost rather this team be put out of its misery than eke out another victory. Can't blame anyone for feeling this way, honestly.

So, let's just go on the assumption that the season is over.

Where do the Celtics go from here?

First, Danny Ainge must assess who is most to blame for this failed, massive underachievement of a season.

Ainge gave Brad Stevens the second-most talented roster in the league this season, and Stevens fumbled it away.

The alleged "best coach in basketball" could never get on the same page with the alleged "basketball genius" in Kyrie Irving, and one of them will have to go this offseason if the Celtics are to get back on track to their ascension of being a championship team.

Seemingly, only one of those two parties actually wants to leave Boston, as now more than ever it seems Kyrie Irving is headed to Manhattan.

Most fans actually seem to be OK with this despite the fact that talent has always trumped coaching in NBA history.

Now Stevens may be a great X's and O's guy (although I haven't heard much raving about his "coming out of timeouts" plays this postseason), but he seems to be overwhelmed as a personality manager.

The issue here, of course, is that managing big personalities is the absolute biggest must for a pro basketball coach.

Is Stevens the right fit?

Here is a list of the last nine coaches to win an NBA title: Steve Kerr, Tyronn Lue, Gregg Popovich, Erik Spoelstra, Rick Carlisle, Phil Jackson, Doc Rivers, Pat Riley and Larry Brown.

All of them were either former players used to playing with superstars with big egos or they had a strong enough personality to put a star player in his place when it was called for.

Stevens never played in the NBA. And unlike Spoelstra, who is the closest comp here, Stevens did not pay his dues in an NBA front office or an assistant coach role.

Barking at Shelvin Mack at a mid-major like Butler is a whole lot different than barking at Kyrie, or even an NBA superstar in the making like Jayson Tatum.

Truth be told, what has happened to the Celtics in this series shouldn't be entirely shocking. We've seen Stevens undressed in the playoffs before.

Three years ago he was outclassed by then-Hawks coach Mike Budenholzer, who is now doing a number on Stevens in this Bucks series.

Two years ago the Celtics entered the playoffs as a 1-seed and dropped their first two games to eighth-seeded Chicago. That Boston team eventually found its playoff sea legs, but those losses were quite alarming.

Stevens then obviously did a tremendous job in the playoffs last season, but it should not be forgotten that the Celtics led the Eastern Conference Finals 2-0 and then 3-2 over Cleveland. They had two opportunities to deliver a knockout blow to LeBron and Co. and it just never came.

An ugly trademark of Stevens' Celtics teams is that they don't know what to do when they've been punched in the mouth. They can catch teams by surprise early in a series, sure, like they did in Game 1 against the Bucks. But when the opposition swings and lands a haymaker of its own, it most often takes a while for Stevens' Celtics to regain their consciousness. The Celtics were said to have been "surprised" that the Bucks came out with so much energy in Game 3, the first game in Boston.

Really?

Now, make no mistake: Stevens does not deserve all of the blame here. I would say if you're divvying up a blame pie for this season, I would give Stevens 60 percent, Kyrie 30 percent and Jayson Tatum and Gordon Hayward 5 percent each.

But the biggest part of Stevens' job is making sure the chemistry is right with a team, and over and over the Celtics' chemistry this season resembled that of a king-sized pack of Mentos being dropped in a 2-liter bottle of Coke. Stevens never found a way to stop the explosions.

Maybe removing the mercurial Kyrie from the equation will solve all. Maybe bringing a happy-go-lucky All-Star-level player like Kemba Walker into the fold is the solution.

But if the Celtics do the deal with the devil and trade all of their young assets and remaining draft picks for another volatile personality in Anthony Davis, would Stevens be able to manage him?

That has never been more doubtful.

Gemini Keep your life simple and headed in the right direction. Don't count on others or trust someone to take care of your responsibilities. Using tact in certain relationships will promote greater respect and romance.

Cancer Choose the right attitude. If you let moodiness set in, you will waste a good day that should be spent helping others and developing closer ties with loved ones.

Leo Work hard, play hard. Don't let the changes going on around you slow you down or interfere with your productivity. A personal change will lead to compliments and romance.

Virgo Take a deep breath and do what needs to be done. Having a plan in place will help to eliminate someone from meddling in your affairs.

Libra Trouble will surface if you let your emotions take the reins. Separate your personal and professional problems. Look for ways to cut your costs and live within your means.

Scorpio A trip or meeting will help you put your plans in motion. Listen to the voice of reason and to what experts have to say before you make an unnecessary purchase.

Sagittarius Express yourself with action. How you treat someone will affect the response you get. Don't make assumptions or believe a rival who likes to gossip or meddle.

Capricorn A change to the way you live or an adjustment to household rules will be beneficial. You are likely to face opposition. Protect yourself against insult, injury and negativity.

Aquarius Stay focused on what's important to you and what you are capable of achieving. Getting together with a loved one or someone who brings out the best in you will be uplifting. Romance is encouraged.

Pisces Do what you can to help an organization or cause you believe in. Problems at home should be handled by taking action, not with harsh words. Offer love and peace, not discord. EUGENIA LAST
